

Contributors to 27.2

Yvonne Atwell is a policy analyst at the Atlantic Centre of Excellence for Women's Health. She has represented Preston in the Legislative Assembly of Nova Scotia and was recently given the Queen's Jubilee Award for outstanding contribution to her community.

Ellen Balka is concerned with several aspects of women and technological change: the computerization of women's work, technology assessment as feminist practice, the use of computer networking technologies for feminist change, and citizenship and access to the information highway. Currently her work is focussed on the implications of an increasingly computerized health system for women and she says that one of her life's ambitions is to elevate feminist debates about information technology to the point where such debates are commonplace rather than unusual.

Natalie Beausoleil is an assistant professor of Social Science and Health in the Division of Community Health of the Faculty of Medicine at Memorial University in St. John's, Newfoundland. Trained as a sociologist, she works from an ethnographic and feminist cultural studies perspective. Her research interests include women's relations to the body, health, aging, physical activity and popular culture, and her newest research project focuses on artistic creativity for people living with cancer.

Ann Bell is a small business owner and a community activist. The founding President of the Provincial Advisory Council on the Status of Women, Newfoundland and Labrador, she also fought and lost two nomination battles for the Progressive Conservative Party, first for a provincial riding and then later for a federal riding.

Naomi Black is Professor Emerita of Political Science (York University) and Adjunct Professor of Women's Studies (Mount Saint Vincent University). Her publications about feminist theory and women's activism include Social Feminism (1989) and, as co-author, Feminist Politics on the Farm (1999). Virginia Woolf as Feminist is forthcoming in 2003.

Louise Carbert is assistant professor of Political Science at Dalhousie University. In addition to her book Agrarian Feminism, she has published articles and book chapters on rural political economy and political participation, including women's election to public office. "Above the Fray" (Canadian Journal of Political Science 2003), reports results from focus groups with rural women leaders in Atlantic Canada, conducted for an Indo-Canadian Shastri Institute project on rural development in Canada and India. She is currently studying rural women's leadership in western Canada, funded by the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council Carolyn Carpan has a Masters degree in Women's Studies from Memorial University of Newfoundland and a Masters degree in Library and Information Studies from Dalhousie University, Halifax. She is an assistant professor/reference librarian in the Olin Library, Rollins College, Winter Park, Florida, USA.

Susan J. Carroll is a professor of Political Science and Women's and Gender Studies at Rutgers University and Senior Scholar at the Center for American Women and Politics (CAWP) of the Eagleton Institute of Politics. She is the author of Women as Candidates in American Politics (Indiana University Press, Second Edition, 1994) and editor of The Impact of Women in Public Office (Indiana, 2001) and Women and American Politics: New Questions, New Directions (Oxford, 2002).

Mary Clancy is President of Burlington College in Burlington, Vermont. Previously Consul General for New England and then Special Advisor to the Associate Deputy Minister for the Americas, Department of Foreign Affairs and International Trade, she earlier represented Halifax in the federal parliament, serving as Opposition Critic for the Status of Women and also Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration and Chair of the Standing Committee on National Defence.

Margaret Conrad, a member of the History Department of Acadia University from 1969 to 2002, was awarded a Canada Research Chair in Atlantic Canada Studies at the University of New Brunswick in 2002. She also served as an adjunct professor of History at Dalhousie from 1992 to 2002. In 1995 she was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society of Canada and, from 1996 to 1998, held Nancy's Chair in Women's Studies at Mount Saint Vincent University. A founding member of the editorial Board of Atlantis, she has written widely in the fields of Atlantic Canada and Women's history.

Beverley Dent is an interdisciplinary studies doctoral student at the University of Saskatchewan and has a Bachelor of Education and a Masters in Continuing Education, both from the University of Saskatchewan. Her doctoral research, also an autoethnographical study, explores the construction of gendered identity. She serves on the Executive of the University of Saskatchewan Women's Studies Research Unit.

Patricia Doyle-Bedwell is assistant professor of Law and Director of the Programme for Indigenous Blacks and Mi'kmaq and the Transition Year Program at Dalhousie University. She has served as Chair of the Nova Scotia Advisory Council on the Status of Women.

Lynda Erickson is a professor and Chair in the Political Science Department at Simon Fraser University. She is also currently Assistant Editor of the Canadian Journal of Political Science. Her research interests and publications are in the areas of political behaviour, party politics and gender politics.

Joanna Everitt is an associate professor of Politics at the University of New Brunswick - Saint John. Along with co-editing Citizen Politics: Research and Theory in Canadian Political Behaviour, she has published articles on the topic of gender differences in public opinion and the media coverage of male and female party leaders.

Audrey MacNevin is a sociologist who teaches at Saint Mary's University in Halifax, Nova Scotia. Her research and writing interests involve sociology of the body, most particularly women's dieting and exercise practices, bodily issues associated with the aging process and the consequences of North American alternative health philosophy to the prevailing standards of female beauty.

Alexa McDonough began her activism at the age of fourteen and throughout her adult life she has supported and participated in dozens of advocacy and social action groups, human rights organizations and professional associations. Her interests and work in social policy research, development and teaching led to her leadership of the Nova Scotia New Democratic Party (Canada's first woman to become the leader of a recognized federal or provincial party - 1981 to 1994) and then leadership of the federal New Democratic Party (1995 to 2003).

Cynthia Morawski is an associate professor in the Faculty of Education at the University of Ottawa, where she teaches both graduate and undergraduate courses related to integrated arts, literacy, children's literature and learners in difficulty. Her current research program focuses on the intrapersonal education of women.

Carmela Murdocca is a PhD candidate in the Sociology and Equity Studies in Education/Collaborative Women's Studies Program at the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education of the University of Toronto. She is a collective member of Fireweed: A Feminist Quarterly of Writing, Politics, Art and Culture.

Brenda O'Neill is an assistant professor in the Department of Political Studies at the University of Manitoba. Her research examines Canadian women's political behaviour, specifically their political opinions and voting behaviour. Recent publications have appeared in the International Journal of Canadian Studies, the Canadian Journal of Political Science, and the International Political Science Review.

Sonia Pitre is a PhD candidate at the Department of Political Science at Université Laval. Her research deals with gender and electoral politics in Canada and, more specifically, New Brunswick.

Elizabeth Quinlan is an interdisciplinary studies doctoral student at the University of Saskatchewan and holds a Master's degree from OISE/University of Toronto in mathematics education. Her doctoral dissertation examines the gender differences in training participation taking into account women's unpaid work and other structural constraints.

Geneviève Rail is a professor and Associate Director (Graduate Studies and Research) of the University of Ottawa's School of Human Kinetics. Trained as a sociologist, she has contributed to feminist cultural studies of sport, physical activity, the body and health. She is currently involved in a number of studies informed by poststructuralism and postcolonialism, all focused on race ethnicity, body culture and health among Canadian girls and women.

Denise L. Spitzer teaches in the Women's Studies programme at the University of Alberta where she is also an adjunct professor in the Department of Anthropology.

Lachlan Story is a PhD candidate in the Department of Sociology, York University.

Lenora Wiebe is an interdisciplinary studies doctoral student at the University of Saskatchewan and has her Master's degree in Family Studies from the University of Manitoba. Her doctoral work is an autoethnographical examination of post-mastectomy sexuality.