

Contributors to 26.2

Leonora Angeles is an assistant professor with a joint appointment at the School of Community and Regional Planning and Women's Studies Programme, University of British Columbia. She received her BA and MA (Political Science) degrees from the University of the Philippines, a diploma in Women and Development from the University of Nottingham, UK, and a PhD (Political Studies) degree from Queen's University, Kingston, Ontario. She is currently working on a SSHRC-funded research project on "Women, Bureaucracy and the Governance of Poverty Alleviation in Southeast Asia: Integrating Gender and Participatory Governance in Poverty Alleviation Plans in the Philippines and Vietnam."

Sedef Arat-Koc teaches women's studies and sociology at Trent University. Her publications focus on immigration policy, immigrant women in Canada and transnational feminism.

Linda Briskin is a professor in the Social Science Division and the School of Women's Studies at York University, Toronto, Ontario. She has both an activist and a scholarly interest in the documentation and development of strategies for change. She has published widely on women and unions, and inclusive pedagogies.

Simone A. Browne is an occasional teacher with the Toronto District School Board, and a PhD candidate at the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education of the University of Toronto in the Department of Sociology and Equity Studies in Education.

Ena Dua is associate professor of Women's Studies at York University. She has recently co-edited (with Angela Robertson), Scratching the Surface: Canadian Anti-Racist Feminist Thought, (Toronto: Women's Press 1999).

Paul Eid is in the process of completing his PhD in sociology at the University of Toronto. His dissertation focuses on ethnic and religious identity retention processes among second generation Arab youths in Montreal, Québec. In addition, he is also a researcher affiliated to the "Centre d'Études Ethniques" de l'Université de Montréal.

Lotsmart Fonjong lectures in the Department of Women and Gender Studies, University of Buea, Cameroon.

Lorena Gajardo is a graduate student working on her thesis which examines how youth of Latin American descent deploy their identity as latina/os in urban centres like Toronto. She is also the coordinator for the Centre for Integrative Anti-Racism Studies, Dept. of Sociology and Equity Studies, OISE. She is presently working on a book, with Teresa Macias, entitled "Transnational and Peripheral Articulations in the Making of Nation and Empire" and will have an article published in the upcoming anthology, This Bridge Called My Back: Twenty Years Later.

Suzan Ilcan teaches in the Department of Sociology and Anthropology at the University of Windsor, Ontario. She is the author of Longing and Belonging: The Cultural Politics of Settlement and co-editor (with Lynne Phillips) of Transgressing Borders: Critical Perspectives on Gender, Household, and Culture.

Leslie Ann Jeffrey is an assistant professor in the Department of History and Politics at the University of New Brunswick - Saint John. This article is based on PhD field research conducted in Thailand in 1996. Her forthcoming book is Sex and Borders: Gender, National Identity and Prostitution Policy in Thailand.

B. Lynne Milgram is an associate professor in the Faculty of Liberal Studies, Ontario College of Art and Design and a research associate in the Department of Social Anthropology, York University. Her ongoing research in the northern Philippines problematizes issues in gender and development with specific regard to women's work in crafts and cultivation, and with special attention to initiatives in microfinance and fair trade.

Chandra Talpade Mohanty is a professor of Women's Studies at Hamilton College in the United States. Her teaching and research emphasize cross-cultural, global women's issues and activism; antiracist and multicultural education; woman of color in the US and feminist theory. She is co-editor of the books Feminist Genealogies, Colonial Legacies, Democratic Futures and Third World Women and The Politics of Feminism. Mohanty is series editor of Gender, Culture and Global Politics for Garland Publishing. She has a book in progress, Feminism Without Borders: Multiculturalism, Globalization and the Politics of Solidarity.

Lynne Phillips teaches in the Department of Sociology and Anthropology at the University of Windsor. Her current research is on the historical role of the United Nations in creating rural spaces (with Suzan Ilcan). She is the co-editor (with Suzan Ilcan) of Transgressing Borders: Critical Perspectives on Gender, Household, and Culture and the editor of The Third Wave of Modernization in Latin America: Cultural Perspectives on Neoliberalism.

Marilyn Porter moved to Newfoundland from the United Kingdom in 1980. She teaches sociology and women's studies at Memorial University of Newfoundland and is active in the St. John's women's community. She has become an email junkie in order to overcome the isolation and participate in a national and global women's movement.

R. Magaly San Martin has been a community activist for many years. She is a community legal worker at Parkdale Community Legal Services and an active member of the Latin American Coalition Against Racism. She is presently working on her doctorate in the Department of Sociology and Equity Studies, OISE.

Peter Sinclair, University Research Professor, Department of Sociology, Memorial University of Newfoundland, is author or co-author of eight books and approximately sixty articles. His current areas of research are: social and economic change, particularly with respect to the impact of restructuring in forest-dependent regions and local action in a global context; and development of interdisciplinary theory and research with respect to the interaction of humans and the environment.

Dee Thompson is a poet living in Barbados.

Alissa Trotz is an assistant professor at the Institute of Women's Studies and Gender Studies, University of Toronto and Sociology and Equity Studies, OISE/UT. She is the co-author, with Linda Peake, of Gender, Ethnicity and Place: Guyanese Women's Identities (London: Routledge 1999). Her current research is on Guyanese migrations and the reproduction of identities across place.